EVENTS AND DECISIONS

Naval Treaties

In order to limit expenditures and avoid another mutually ruinous naval arms race, the great naval powers of the world have signed a number of treaties, limiting the overall size of their fleets and the size of each individual ship. As a signatory of these treaties, we are subject to certain restrictions, but as long as our opponents follow them as well, the balance of power should be maintained.

We are currently between 90% and 100% of Britain in Capital Ship Strength.
