Let's check in with our hero, who we've not seen in a while, as he trains for his upcoming adventure. I can't think of a reason to watch this other than it was on the History Channel, so I kind of had to. I decided to give it a shot, and I had an excellent time, but I'll give you a run down of the plot. In the 1800's a young man goes on a quest to find the cure for a dreaded disease that's decimating the world's population. He decides to share his secret with an investigative journalist, that eventually becomes "dad", who doesn't believe this is possible. He sets out to find the answer and make a difference. There were a number of things I liked about this show. First, the pacing was really well done. I wasn't bored at all, it's never long enough to get bored and I didn't get bored in the part where the team became "dad" and the good guys decide they need to stop bad guys from finding the cure for the disease. The writer/director/actor/creator team did a really nice job. Second, they covered a lot of interesting topics. I'm not an expert on anything, but I enjoyed learning about the history of Quarantine, the history of the disease we're dealing with, the quarantine procedures, the real life situations that affect us today, and all the politics that surround everything. Third, there was a lot of humor. A lot of it made me laugh or smile, and a few of the more surprising things kept me from fully grasping the humor. Fourth, the team they showed was a mix of the original and the re-enactor team. They all had to be good actors, and did a really good job of being believable, but I liked that they also had some of the original characters, like Kate, come in and help
